“Fortune P’rogis”

This interactive project stumped me at first. I wanted to do something with food then food led to culture and dialect. The end result was a combination of the two. The goal of the piece was to let people know that Pittsburgh Pennsylvania has it's own dialect by creating plates with sayings on them. The catch was that the sayings were written as though spoken in the dialect of Pittsburghese. As an insight to the culture of Pittsburgh I put pirogi's on the plate because they are a big food in Pittsburgh. The project to me was a success because I informed a majority of the class of Pittsburgh's dialect and showed them a new style of food.
